

Concerns have been raised with regard to language examples used in one plenary presentation. As the local organising committee and the DGfS, we agree that in principle linguistic data are the object of inquiry and hence do not represent an author's personal opinion or attitude. However, linguistic examples always carry meaning and may require appropriate contextualisation. We are committed to creating an inclusive space for all participants and reject any non-contextualised use of language examples containing racist, sexist or otherwise discriminatory terms or content (see also our Code of Conduct). As organisers of this conference we regret if any participants should have been hurt or offended and encourage them to engage with us.
